The dominant party in this country hold in theory, and carry out

mon Government. The dominant party in this country hold in theory, and carry ont in praotice, the idea that the common Government is a Government made by the whole people in the aggregate, and as a unit. They fail or refuse to recognize the prominent and distinctive existence of the several States as partice to the Federal compact. Hence they speak continually of the people, and of government by the people. They say are you not willing that the majority shall rule: What objection have you to the expression of the will of the majority shall determine, or in what manner the will of that majority is ascertained? It is a sufficient answer to your objection, they say, that this is a specific Government, and you much bow to the will of the people, or of the majority of the people. In all this, sir, the existence of these States is igacred. The eminent gentleman, now the President of the United States, declared upon a recent occasion, in a public address, cubetantially, that the States hold the came relation to the common Government that the counties of a State hold to the State itself. Accordingly, they are prone to attempt to administer Federal affairs between the States precisely as the Legislature of a State will administer the affaire to each county within its borders constitutional limitations, and to do in the several States just whatever the dominant party may desire to do. Growing out of this is a claim to monopolize all the Territorice of the United States. It is value to make a sonetitutional argument—vain to appeal to the practice of the Government—vain to appeal to the decisions of the judicial tribunals of the land. They will tell you that the will of the ration is against it. The majority of the people in these Confederate States being in favor of excluding nearly one-half of their brethren, and having the numerical power to do so, they propose to do so in accordance with the vicious theory which they entertain, and of which I bave

This is exceedingly ideal and far-fetched. Such differences may as well account for carriagnakes and changes of the moon, as the present brabble in politios. It es happens that the party in power in the Executive Department was not elected by a majority of the people, but by the majority of the people, but by the majorities of States. They are not the representatives of a majority are against them, and if they obeyed the majority, they would resign and go home. We of the South have no reason to complain of the aggregate majority of votes, but of the States. These very powers Mr. B. would magnify at the expense of a majority of the people.

Besidee, we have only to coucult the history of parties to see that they have all in turn magnified State or Federal power to be well account for earth quantity. They would resign and go home. We of the South have no formation of the aggregate majority of votes, but of the States. These very powers Mr. B. would magnify at the expense of a majority of the people.

We need not follow up the history of parties. The intelligent reader can cupply what is incurred for illustration.

The Senatorial election, which was briefly telegraphed over the last Pony Express, was brought about under extraordinary circumstances. On the night preceding the election the Douglas and Breckinridge Democrata, favorable to the organizing of the Democratic party, as formerly existing, agreed to hold another Senatorial cauens. All the Breckinridge and a large majority of the Donglas members were present. The prominent candidates before the Gancus were Denver, Weller and Nugent. The Breckinridge men preferred Weller, but could get no Donglasites to support him.

The next oboice was Nugent, the Donglasites claiming that his election would attract frish voice to organize the Democracy. On this theory Nugent was nominated ever Denver and Weller. The second ballot was about the same. During the progress of the third ballot, the Republicans and scattering votere, commenced concentrating on McDougal, amid a seene of the wildest excitement, which continued until the President announced, from the Clerk's tally, the election of McDougal, by 36 out of 111 votes, and declared the Convention adjourned sine die On this showing, McDougal received his certificate of election. A subsequent examination of the Clerk's record, disclosed the fact that 113 votes were oast, two scattering ination of the Clerk's record, disclosed the fact that 113 votes were oast, two scattering votes not having been counted. It was admitted on all hands that this mistake had occurred, and that McDongal falls one vote ahort of a majority. Opinion is divided as to whether the Clerk's mistake can be corrected so as to invalidate the election. It is generally admitted that, had the mistake been discovered before the Convention adjourned, another ballot would have easily elected McDongal.

The Benate voted, yesterday, to consider that no election had taken place, and passed a resolution to go into a new joint convention. If the Assembly concurs, it is supposed that McDougal will resubnit his name, in which case it is apparent that he will get such a majority as will make his election doubly sure.
